How does a credit card billing cycle work?

A credit card (1-844-706-3250) billing cycle is the period of time between two credit card statements, usually lasting 28-31 days. On the last day of a credit card's billing cycle – also known as the closing date – the card's issuer will compile the account's (1-844-706-3250) billing statement. This includes a bill for all the charges made to your account during that billing cycle, minus any payments made. You (1-844-706-3250) can find the starting and ending dates for your credit card's billing cycle on your monthly statement.

Why Understanding Your Billing Cycle Is Important

Understanding your (1-844-706-3250) credit card's billing cycle is important for a few reasons. First, it's important because your statement balance – the amount you have to pay (1-844-706-3250) by the due date to avoid interest – is comprised of (1-844-706-3250) purchases made during the billing cycle. The statement balance is also reported to credit bureaus each month and factors into your credit utilization.
